A PUBLIC LOSS.

The Old Guard is one of the institutions of New York. On parade days it is giordens in its gold lace and feathers. It is not altogether a martial hody, but street, to recover $50, which he paid to joins the civic with the military in its character. It consists not only of war-character. It consists not only of war-riors, but of civillans of distinction in the various walks of life, whose in the paid to prove the prove the paid to prove the paid to prove the paid to prove the prove the paid to prove the prove the paid to prove the paid to prove the paid to prove the paid to prove the prove the paid to prove the prove the paid to prove or sage-treping of any rejected manuscreps character. It comments not only of war-traployment after he had been taught, or pictures, of whatsuguer character or sains, flors, but of civilians of distinction and was discharged two weeks latterriors, but of civillans of distinction in the various walks of life, whose purses are plethoric enough to stand the expense of costly uniforms, princely convivial entertainments and brilliant annual festivals. If it has not won laurels in battle, it has gained glory in ballrooms, and if some of its members have never smelled powder, all of them the charges on behalf of the life of the li are highly perfumed. If the Old Cuard has not sought danger at the cannon's mouth, it has braved it at the mouth of the champagne bottle.

Every one will regret to learn that the armory of the Old Guard was the theatre of a fire last evening, and that the rich uniforms of the members fell victims of the flames. The destruction of gold lace and braid and resplendent epaulets and waving plumes and brilliant buckles and highly ernamented swords was deplorable. But more re- a rettable still was the loss of many military relics which were in the armory, together with the full-length por traits of some of the gallant guards nen, in the full glory of their glittering regimentals.

He was walking from John Potters farm, in Racia Coon township, to the bone of his aunitable Ellen Braden, when he thought he weald stop and rest. He leaned back against a fence, placing his arms on the rail behind him.

A chill of horror struck him as his arms sank into the springy folds of a huge blacksnake which had been stretched along the top rail. Mr. Braden is an athlete of no mean acquirements, but his feat on feeling the writing snake under his classy probably breaks the werld's record for a standing high jump backward. He just sprang into the air—that was all he did but he landed on the other side of the fence, having just cleared the ride rail without a scratch.

CHASTISED BY A COW.

An Incident Which Tends to Show that Cattle Are Intelligent. A cow and a steer—the latter two or three years old—were the only occupants of the barnyard where the occurrence took place, writes Alien Pringle.

A batting of hay was put out to them, the cow taking possession. The steer wished to share it, but the cow, like some bigher animals, was selfish, and was bent on taking the whole of it, and as often as he would manocurre around from adde to side to get a bite she would drive him off at the point of her horns.

The steer was so persistent that at The steer was so persistent that at that cow's rationic gave way, and

The steer was so persistent that at last the cow's ratione gave way, and making a determined and victous charge on him punished him severely, though he was her own offspring, says the Popular Science Monthly.

The steer felt badly hurt, not only in body but evidently in mind as well, and immediately started out of the yard and off down the lane towards the passure where were the rest of the stock, bellowing vengeance at every step in a language which was unmistakable to the bystanders and which the mother well understood, as she censed eating and listened intently to the threatenings of what was to come.

When these died away in the distance she resumed her ration, but with evident approximation. In due time the steer was seen returning, bringing with him a companion larger and etronger than himself. As they approached the rumbings of rage and revenge could be again heard, which give londer as they came nearer. The cow took in the situation at once, and was now terror-stricken. As her assailants rushed into the yard she dodged them and rushed out at life-and-death speed and away towards the rest of the stock in the field with her pursuers close on her track.
